As the Syrian crisis enters its eighth year, significant civilian casualties, displacement, and destruction continues. Palestine refugees are amongst the worst affected by the conflict. Of the 560,000 Palestine refugees registered with UNRWA in Syria prior to the conflict, around 254,000 have been displaced at least once within the country. Over 120,000 have fled to other countries, including approximately 33,000 to Lebanon and 17,000 to Jordan.

Of those remaining in Syria, approximately 30 per cent are children, and 95 per cent rely on humanitarian assistance to meet their most basic needs. Humanitarian access to the approximately 28,900 Palestine refugees located in hard-to-reach and besieged areas remains a key challenge.

Regionally, Palestine refugees face particular difficulties accessing safety outside Syria as neighbouring states have severely restricted their entry. There are also concerns over instances of refoulement and forced deportations, including of children. In Lebanon, Palestine refugees from Syria rely on UNRWA to meet basic needs, as the poverty rate among Palestine refugee families from Syria is estimated at 89 per cent and almost 95 per cent of those households are food insecure. In Jordan, Palestine refugees from Syria face a myriad of protection restrictions, including lack of legal status, difficulties in gaining and/or maintaining legal residency, limited freedom of movement in some cases, and the very real risk of refoulement for those who have entered irregularly. These factors limit their access to employment and public services, particularly for those without Jordanian documents.
